

Thermal “Voetspore” on the road to the Equator

With the Voetspore Team back in town from their epic adventure “Voetspore on the Equator” we cannot help but anxiously await the new show to air! According to Johan Badenhorst this was one of their toughest adventures to date and just by following the Voetspore Diaries no one can disagree. The Voetspore team will be doing several guest appearances on which they will share their journey, stories and the value of the equipment used.

It seems that the FLIR PathFindIR that was installed did it’s name justice by performing well on this extreme journey, but we need to wait and see until the air shows to view the exiting adventure in thermal!

Voetspore is a documentary adventure on SABC2. Johan Badenhorst and his friends has undertaken many epic journeys throughout Africa since the television channel approached him in 2000 for the first Voetspore adventure. Voetspore is a documentary adventure on SABC2. Johan Badenhorst and his friends has undertaken many epic journeys throughout Africa since the television channel approached him in 2000 for the first Voetspore adventure.

During these journeys, the team made several trips from Cape Town to Kairo, Casablanca and back. Along the way they visit familiar places and discovered new ones. The television series is about enjoying in the great outdoors. The seventh adventure started in September at Cape Agulhas, and ended 100 days later in Alexandria, Egypt. The series was shown on SABC 2 from March, 2013 with English subtitles.

Now the team returned from their expedition No 8 - a journey along the Equator, from Kenya to Gabon. The first part is relatively easy. Kenya and Uganda are tourist friendly countries. But then you hit the DRC. This is true, African adventure.... and may have been the hardest journey thus far, wait and see!

